

College is a place where students can go to get an advanced education in topics that interest them and direct them toward a profession for use in their everyday lives. There are so many great possibilities that college has to offer which is why I would like to go to college. Getting this higher education is important because it allows people to learn what they are passionate about in life, it offers a whole new window of people to meet, and it allows them to explore who they are as a person.

College offers a lot in life, but mainly it allows people to explore new topics and ideas that they are excited about. Most times, students walk into college with a rough idea of what they want to do when they are older, but this may change throughout the time they spend in college. A prime example of this would be my youth minister. She originally wanted to be a paraprofessional; however, this later changed when she found something that she could truly relate to and had a stronger longing to pursue. Some students who graduate highschool don't have even the slightest idea of what they would like to do in college. For me, college would really open up a whole new window of possibilities, allowing me to find out what I am truly passionate about. Nothing in college is set in stone. Students can change their courses in college so they aren't set on one specific pathway. They have the leeway to change whenever they don't feel as committed to their career path. I can sometimes be a little indecisive, so this time period will provide ample time to figure out what I want to do when I'm older.

Not only will students go to college to learn about what they are intrigued by, but they will meet so many new people that they share the same interests with. My parents, along with many others, are still in contact with the people they met in college. Students may even meet new people they would never have thought to interact with in highschool. This is another thing I'm excited about with college. I will be able to open up to a new community of people, and college will allow me to find new people who could one day become lifelong friends.

Lastly, students are considered adults thus not having the need to be supervised all the time. Without this supervision, they can find out who they truly are and try new things they may not have thought about trying. They may explore a new topic that they can really relate to or find fascinating. This can lead them to profession ideas and what they want to get their degree in. As of right now, I don't have the slightest idea of what I would like to do as a profession when I'm older. What I do know is, I want to get a higher education through college. I will strive to find a successful career that holds my attention while also allowing me to love what I do.

All in all, college can be very beneficial for students to explore a new world of people and possibilities. Jobs that pay more or include what someone enjoys doing may not be open if they don't have a college degree. It is important to consider going to college after highschool or at a later time in life. College is an experience that everyone should undergo in some way, even if it is just for a little bit. College can be quite beneficial, and it offers an incredible opportunity to learn new things that you will use later on in life.
